

Diabetes Continuing Education 2010

for nurses and allied health professionals

facilitated by

Diabetes Outreach

University of South Australia

Diabetes Outreach and the University of South Australia have a special interest in the provision of diabetes continuing education. In particular both would like to increase education opportunities for rural, remote and isolated health professionals in South Australia. As a response, we offer an audioconferencing series as an introduction to diabetes for health professionals.

The series includes seven audioconferences offered on a Tuesday evening from 7.00pm – 8.00pm, commencing in April and finishing in June. The audioconferences are interactive and presented by experienced health professionals.

What is it?

Audioconferencing is the linking of individuals or groups in two or more locations using the telephone. It is also a term used interchangeably with teleconferencing or teletutorial, the latter two also referring to links via a television or telephone.

The use of audioconferencing in business and education has been popular because it allows participants to interact while remaining in their own home or workplace. Also, this mode of delivering information and education is more cost effective as it decreases the need for travel and accommodation.

The audioconference is organised by Diabetes Outreach with participants covering their own line costs (standard STD rates apply for rural areas). The external education folder, handouts and administration costs are covered in your registration fee. We hope you enjoy this experience and look forward to some interesting discussions.

Benefits:

- Folder with topic discussion and readings
- Certificate on completion of series
- Multidisciplinary participants

Please book early.

Enrolments close 3 weeks prior to the first session.
